Telephone survey conducted with a randomly selected sample of 2,501 Calgarians aged 18 years and older between March 1st and March 24th, 2022.

- Both landline (40%) and cell phone (60%) sample were used.
- The average interview duration was 30 minutes.

Final data were weighted to ensure the overall sample's quadrant, ward, and age/gender composition reflects that of the actual Calgary population aged 18 or older according to 2019 Municipal and 2016 Federal Census data.

The margin of error (MOE) for the total sample of 2,501 is ± 2.0 percentage points, 19 times out of 20. The margin of error increases for sub-groups of the total sample.

Calgary's equity-deserving communities (EDCs) are defined as groups of people who generally have less access to opportunities, resources, and systems of power because of their actual or perceived identity or identities. EDCs often experience social and financial disadvantages because of systems of oppression, which takes many forms including but not limited to racism, sexism, and ableism. Towards this, The City would like to better understand the perspective of equity-deserving communities through the lens of the annual Spring Pulse and Citizen Satisfaction surveys. The data in this report are from the most recent (2022) Spring Pulse survey, for demographics of interest, specifically those that differentiate equity-deserving communities. All Spring Pulse and Citizen Satisfaction surveys are conducted in English to manage time and cost restraints. The City acknowledges the ability to speak English may be a barrier for potential participants.

How to Read this Report

The tables in this report present results from the 2022 Spring Pulse Survey for some Equity-Deserving Communities (EDCs) compared to their counterparts. The demographic variables used to categorize EDCs are as follows, with the EDC category noted in bold text:

Gender

Categories:

- Male
- Female

Note: self-reported (i.e. not inferred by the interviewer); the number of respondents who identified with another category is too small to report separately

Household Income

Categories:

- < $60,000
- $60,000 to < $105,000
- $105,000 to < $150,000
- $150,000 +

Note: pre-tax annual household income

Disability

Categories:

- Yes
- No

Note: self-reported. “Yes” includes respondents with a disability as well as respondents who have a family member with a disability; respondents were not asked to identify the specific disability/disabilities

Age

Categories:

- 18 to 64 years
- 65 years or older

Note: Some charts in this report do not add to 100% due to rounding.

Racialized People

Categories:

- Yes
- No

Note: self-reported racialized status. The number of respondents who identified as Indigenous is too small to report separately

Born in Canada

Categories:

- Yes
- Immigrated as children (<18)
- Immigrated as adults (18+)

Note: foreign-born respondents were not asked for their specific country of origin

Statistically significant differences between an EDC and their counterpart (e.g., females compared to males) are noted throughout the report with arrows: ↓ Statistically lower ↑ Statistically higher

For example: Males 54%
Females 66%↑ = more females than males agreed with the statement and the difference is statistically significant

Significant differences are an indication that a difference is not due to chance. A mathematical formula is used to calculate each difference independently. Whether or not a difference is considered significant depends on a few factors including the total sample size and the variability of responses. Larger sample sizes mean that smaller differences are significant. Additionally, variability of responses means that the more alike the responses are the more significant a change will be.

Detailed Findings

Gender

Females and males do not differ in their perceptions of the overall quality of life in Calgary.

- Females and males both report the overall quality of life in Calgary as “good” at about the same rate (76% females and 78% males).
- Around two-thirds of respondents across both genders agree that “The City of Calgary municipal government, fosters a city that is inclusive and accepting of all” (67% females and 68% males).
- Females and males do not differ in their perceptions that The City “delivers programs and services that remove barriers to participation for Calgarians who need it the most” (51% females and 54% males).

In terms of opportunities for input and how The City uses and includes citizen input, females and males provide similar ratings.

- Similar numbers of females and males agree that The City allows citizens to “have meaningful input into decision-making” (60% females and 60% males).
- When asked about their level of confidence that The City “is working to improve how it includes citizen input into important decisions,” females and males do not statistically differ in their agreement levels (67% females and 63% males). However, females are less likely than males to “strongly disagree” with this statement as compared to males (10% females vs. 13% males).
- Both genders agree “The City uses input from Calgarians in decision-making about City projects and services” at a similar rate (64% females and 62% males).

Overall, females are more optimistic about The City's performance when compared to males.

- While ratings of trust in The City of Calgary do not differ between females and males (47% females and 46% males), females are more likely than males to agree that “Calgary is on the right track to be a better city 10 years from now” (75% females vs. 71% males).
 - Males are more likely to disagree that Calgary “is on the right track” as compared to females (29% males vs. 25% females).
- Females are more satisfied than their male counterparts with some aspects of The City's performance.
 - Compared to males, females are more satisfied with The City as a whole (72% females vs. 67% males) and Calgary's City Council (64% females vs. 57% males).
 - Males are more likely than females to be “very dissatisfied” with The City as a whole (10% males vs. 7% females), City Council (19% males vs. 13% females), and City Administration (7% males vs. 4% females).

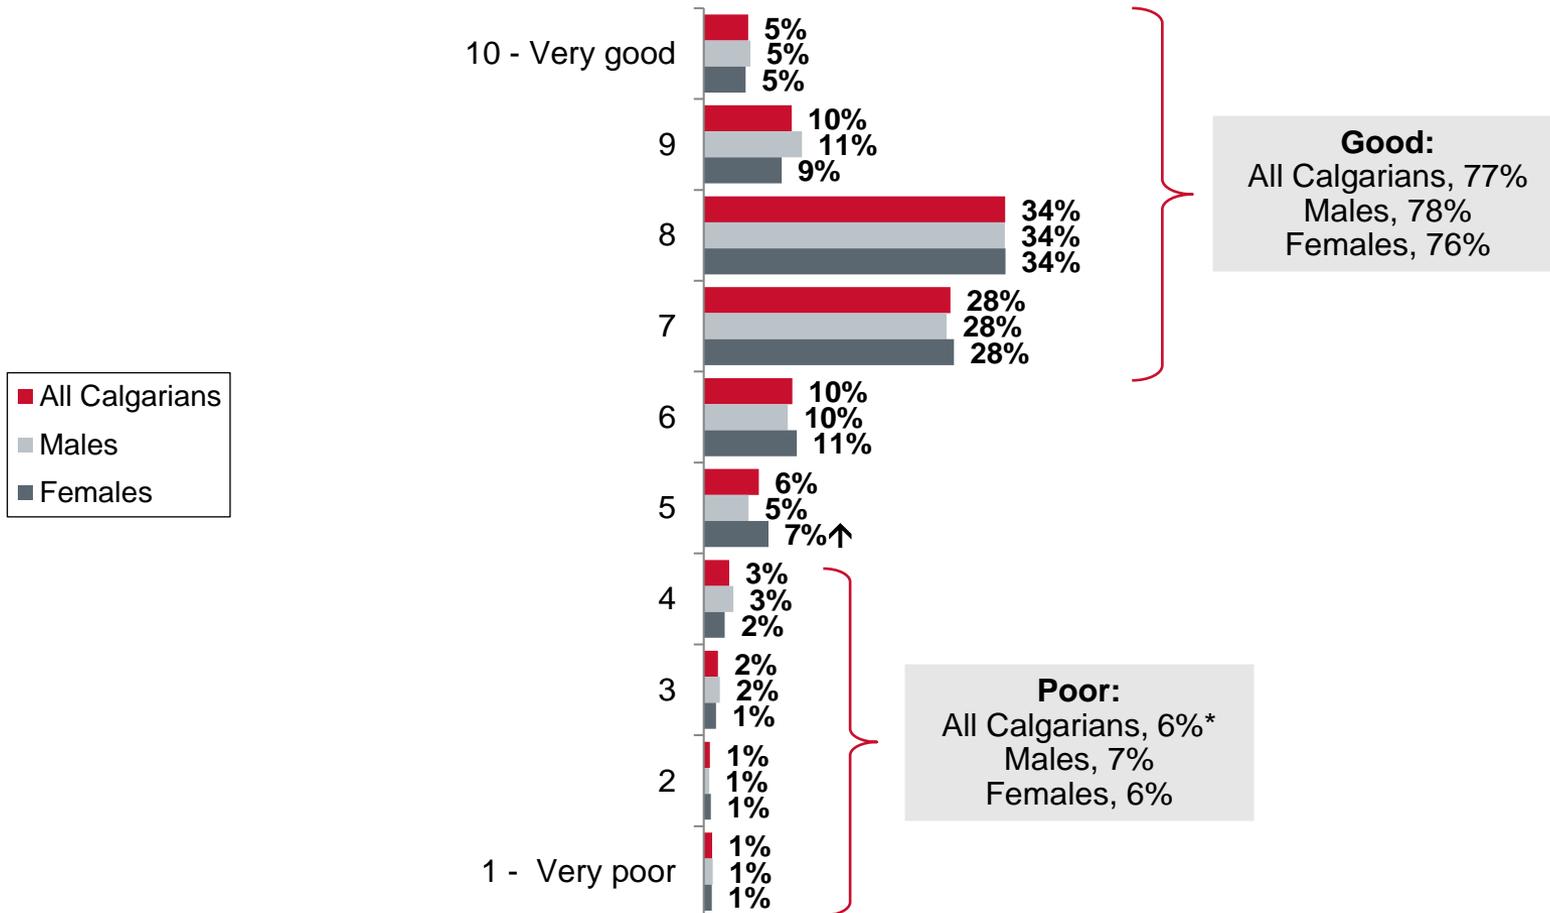

Overall, females and males have similar levels of satisfaction when it comes to perceptions about the environment.

- More than nine-in-ten respondents across both genders rate the overall state of Calgary's environment as “good” (95% females and 96% males).
 - Females are less likely than males to say that the overall state of Calgary's environment is “very good” (33% females vs. 43% males).
- Likewise, both genders have similar levels of satisfaction with The City's performance to protect the environment (83% females and 85% males), with females being less likely to be “very satisfied” than males (23% females vs. 30% males).
- When asked about their satisfaction with The City's “programs and services aimed at helping Calgarians reduce their environmental impact,” females and males do not statistically differ in their satisfaction levels (78% females and 75% males).

Racialized People, People of Colour, or Indigenous People

Findings: Racialized People

Perceptions of quality of life and inclusivity are moderately high among all Calgarians, with no significant differences between racialized and non-racialized citizens.

- No significant differences emerged for ratings of overall quality of life in Calgary between racialized and non-racialized Calgarians (77% racialized and 78% non-racialized).
- Around two-thirds of Calgarians agree that The City “fosters a city that is inclusive and accepting of all”, with similar ratings between racialized and non-racialized people (67% racialized and 68% non-racialized).
- While both groups do not differ in their overall ratings that the City “delivers programs and services that remove barriers to participation for Calgarians who need it the most” (55% racialized and 52% non-racialized), racialized people are more likely to “completely agree” with this statement (9% racialized vs. 5% non-racialized).

Calgarians who consider themselves a person of colour, racialized person, or Indigenous person have a more positive outlook on nearly all aspects of opportunities for citizen input as compared to those who do not consider themselves racialized.

- Racialized people are more likely to agree that The City “allows citizens to have meaningful input into decision-making” (66% racialized vs. 58% non-racialized), while non-racialized people are more likely to disagree with this statement (42% non-racialized vs. 34% racialized).
- Further, racialized people feel more confident that The City “is working to improve how it includes citizen input into important decisions” as compared to non-racialized people (71% racialized vs. 63% non-racialized).
- When asked about The City using “input from Calgarians in decision-making about City projects and services,” both groups have similar levels of agreement (66% racialized and 62% non-racialized).

Racialized people are less likely to distrust The City of Calgary and are more likely to say that Calgary is on the right track to be a better city.

- Racialized people distrust The City of Calgary less than non-racialized Calgarians (17% racialized vs. 25% not racialized); however, overall trust levels are not statistically different for the two groups (45% racialized and 48% non-racialized).
- No significant differences emerged for levels of satisfaction with The City as a whole (71% racialized and 69% non-racialized), Council (64% racialized and 60% non-racialized), and Administration (79% racialized and 76% non-racialized).
- Racialized people are more likely to agree that “Calgary is on the right track to be a better city in 10 years from now” as compared to other Calgarians (77% racialized vs. 71% non-racialized).

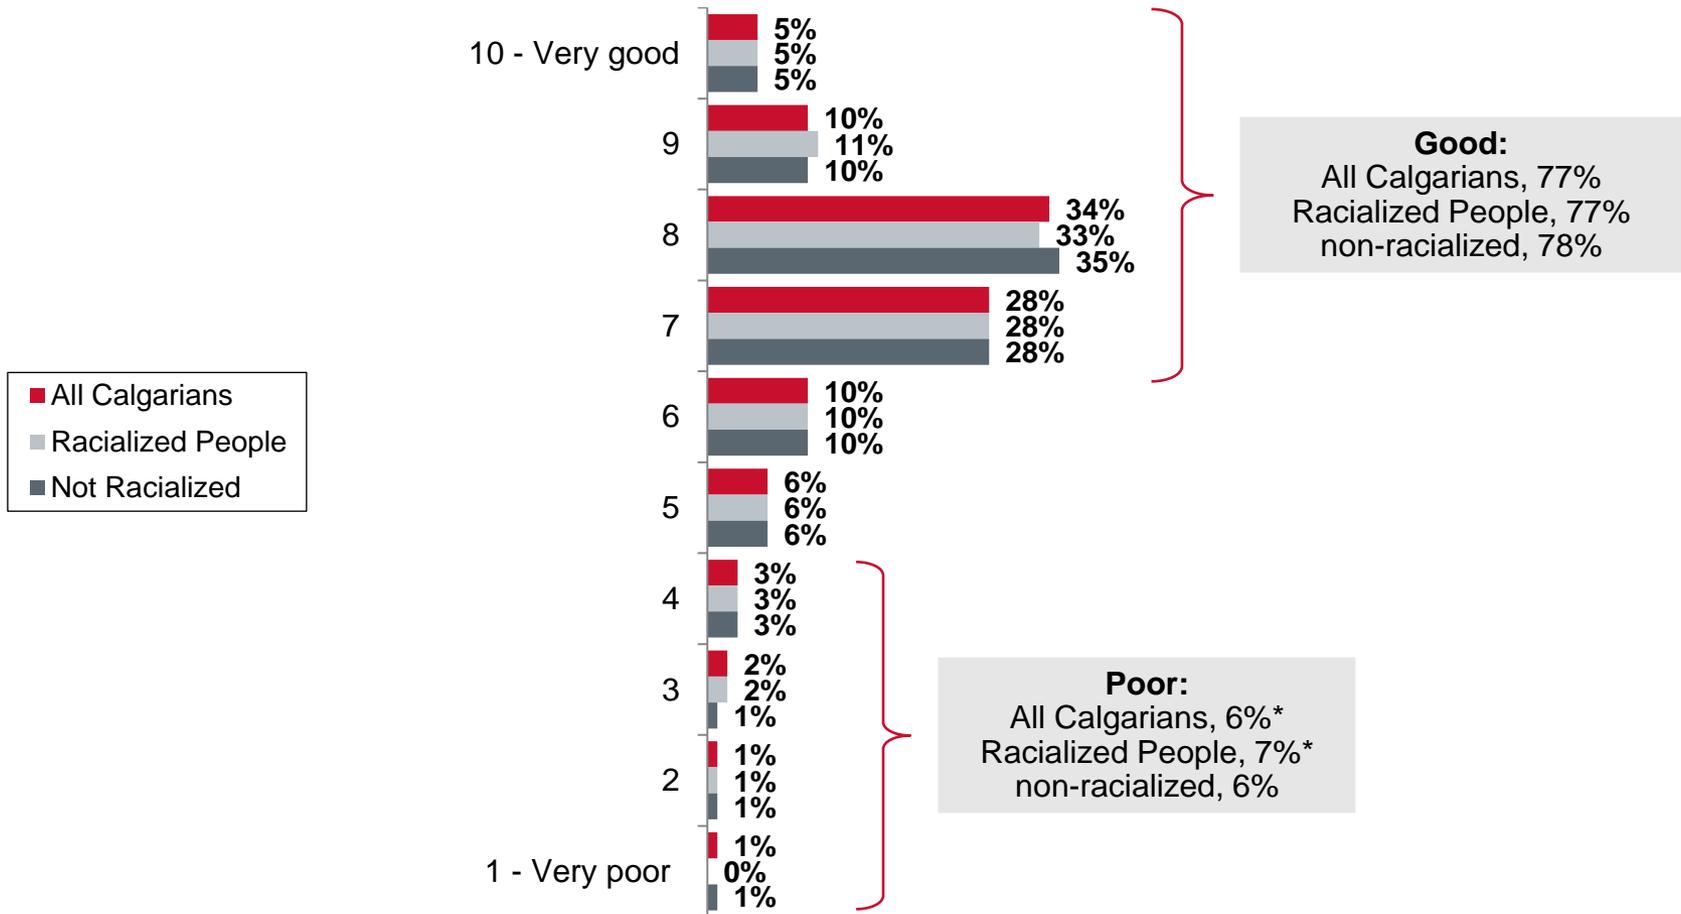

Overall, both groups provide strong ratings for The City’s environmental performance, with racialized people being more satisfied with The City’s programs and services in this area compared to non-racialized Calgarians.

- More than nine-in-ten respondents across both groups rate the overall state of Calgary’s environment as “good” (95% racialized and 95% non-racialized).
- Likewise, both groups have similar levels of satisfaction with The City’s performance to protect the environment (84% racialized and 84% non-racialized).
- When asked about their satisfaction with The City’s “programs and services aimed at helping Calgarians reduce their environmental impact,” racialized people have higher levels of satisfaction than non-racialized people (81% racialized vs. 75% non-racialized).

Disability Status

Findings: Disability Status

Calgarians who have a disability, or live in the same household as someone with a disability, tend to hold lower ratings of overall quality of life, inclusion, and removing barriers when compared to other Calgarians.

- Calgarians who have a disability or live in the same household as someone with a disability rate the overall quality of life lower than those in households without a disability present (72% disability vs. 79% no disability).
- Calgarians who have a disability or live in the same household as someone with a disability are less likely to agree with statements about inclusivity and removing barriers.
 - Calgarians who have a disability or live in the same household as someone with a disability are less likely to agree that The City of Calgary “fosters a city that is inclusive and accepting” (62% disability vs. 69% no disability) and that The City “delivers programs and services that remove barriers to participation for Calgarians that need it most” (47% disability vs. 54% no disability).
- When asked about citizen input, the two groups do not statistically differ in their perceptions: “The City allows citizens to have meaningful input into decision-making” (58% disability and 60% no disability), “The City of Calgary is working to improve how it includes citizen input into important decisions” (61% disability and 66% no disability), and “The City uses input from Calgarians in decision-making about City projects and services” (61% disability and 64% no disability).

Overall, Calgarians who have a disability or live in the same household as someone with a disability are less satisfied with The City’s performance as compared to those Calgarians in households that do not have a disability.

- Calgarians who have a disability or live in the same household as someone with a disability are more likely to distrust The City (27% disability & 22% no disability).
- Reflecting this sentiment, Calgarians who have a disability or live in the same household as someone with a disability are less satisfied with the performance of The City as a whole (65% disability vs. 71% no disability) and Calgary’s City Administration (72% disability vs. 78% no disability).
- The two groups do not differ in their perceptions that Calgary “is on the right track to be a better city 10 years from now” (70% disability vs. 73% no disability).

Overall, respondents from households with a disability present and those from households without a disability present provide strong ratings for The City's environmental performance, with no statistically significant differences emerging in this area.

- More than nine-in-ten respondents across both groups rate the overall state of Calgary's environment as "good" (94% disability and 96% no disability).
- Likewise, both groups have similar levels of satisfaction with The City's performance to protect the environment (81% disability and 85% no disability).
- Finally, Calgarians who have a disability or live in the same household as someone with a disability do not differ from other Calgarians in their satisfaction levels with The City's "programs and services aimed at helping Calgarians reduce their environmental impact" (74% disability and 77% no disability).

Age

Older Calgarians (65+) do not statistically differ from younger Calgarians in their ratings of the overall quality of life in Calgary or inclusivity.

- Almost eight-in-ten respondents across both groups rate the overall quality of life as “good” (78% 65+ and 78% 18-64).
- Calgarians who are aged 65+ do not differ from other Calgarians in their perceptions that The City “fosters a city that is inclusive and accepting of all” (64% 65+ and 68% 18-64).
- Likewise, perceptions that “The City delivers programs and services that remove barriers to participation for Calgarians who need it the most” are modest among Calgarians (53% all Calgarians), with no statistically significant differences between the two age groups (53% 65+ and 53% 18-64).

Older Calgarians (65+) are generally less optimistic when it comes to perceptions of citizen input.

- When asked about opportunities for providing input, older Calgarians are less likely to agree that The City “allows citizens to have meaningful input into decision-making” (57% 65+ vs. 61% 18-64).
- Older Calgarians are also less likely to agree that The City uses input from Calgarians in decision-making about City projects and services (58% 65+ vs. 65% 18-64).

Overall, both age groups of Calgarians have similar perceptions of The City’s performance.

- Ratings of trust in The City are modest and do not differ between the two age groups (48% 65+ and 47% 18-64).
 - This equity-deserving group also has similar levels of satisfaction with The City as a whole (69% 65+ and 70% 18-64), Council (58% 65+ and 62% 18-64), and Administration (76% 65+ and 78% 18-64).

While ratings of the overall state of Calgary’s environment are similar between the two age groups, older Calgarians (65+) are more satisfied with The City’s environmental performance.

- More than nine-in-ten respondents across both age groups rate the overall state of Calgary’s environment as “good” (96% 65+ and 95% 18-64).
- However, older Calgarians (65+) are more satisfied with “The City’s performance to protect the environment” as compared to other Calgarians (90% 65+ vs. 83% 18-64); differences in the overall satisfaction are driven by ratings of “somewhat satisfied”, with older Calgarians being more likely to indicate this response option than other Calgarians (64% 65+ vs. 56% 18-64).
- Finally, older Calgarians are more satisfied with “The City’s programs and services aimed at helping Calgarians reduce their environmental impact” (81% 65+ vs. 76% 18-64).

Immigrant Status

Findings: Immigrant Status

Calgarians who immigrated to Canada generally have higher ratings of the overall quality of life, inclusivity, and removing barriers as compared to those who were born in Canada.

- Calgarians who immigrated to Canada as children have higher ratings of the overall quality of life as compared to those born in Canada (83% immigrated <18 vs. 76% born in Canada).
- Similarly, those who immigrated to Canada as children are more likely to agree that The City “fosters a city that is inclusive and accepting of all” as compared to those born in Canada (76% immigrated <18 vs. 66% born in Canada).
- Compared to those who were born in Canada, Calgarians who immigrated to Canada as adults are also more likely to agree that The City “delivers programs and services that remove barriers to participation for Calgarians who need it the most” (59% immigrated 18+ vs. 51% born in Canada), while those who immigrated to Canada as children are less likely to disagree with this statement (9% immigrated <18 vs. 16% born in Canada).

Overall, Calgarians who immigrated to Canada have more positive views as compared to those born in Canada when it comes to perceptions of citizen input.

- Those who immigrated to Canada are more likely to agree that The City “allows citizens to have meaningful input into decision-making” (74% immigrated 18+, 68% immigrated <18 vs. 56% born in Canada), that The City “is working to improve how it includes citizen input into important decisions” (74% immigrated 18+, 71% immigrated <18 vs. 62% born in Canada), and that The City “uses input from Calgarians in decision-making about City projects and services” (74% immigrated 18+ vs. 61% born in Canada).
